Election Forums: Have a Plan B in Your Pocket

By Chuck Parker, VP Content

As the 2018 election season ramps up, so does election coverage on Insights on PBS Hawaiʻi. Coverage kicked off on July 5 with the leading candidates in the Democratic Primary for Governor: incumbent David Ige and Congresswoman Colleen Hanabusa.

Planning began well before the June 5 deadline for candidates to file papers to run for office. The first step was deciding which races to cover. No easy task, as every contested race is important, whether on the statewide level or at the county district level.

The list of races to cover was evaluated, narrowed, scrutinized further, then finalized. Broadcast dates for the candidate forums were set for the races that were chosen. A list was forwarded to the program guide editor with the caveat, Schedule subject to change.

Then we invited the candidates. Simple, right? Not so fast. For instance, two of three candidates in one race accepted immediately. The third candidate wasn't sure about availability. A few days later, the campaign said, no can do. Scheduling conflict. In another race, an incumbent facing a tough challenger declined.

Time for Plan B. A different race was chosen to replace the one with the reluctant incumbent. Both candidates in the newly chosen race agreed to appear. For the three-candidate race mentioned earlier, another date was proposed, and all accepted.

The result? Insights on PBS Hawai'i brings voters 11 pre-primary races over six episodes through August 9.

Up next? General election planning.

Her Gender: Just One Way She's a Different Kind of Chief

Leslie Wilcox
PBS Hawai'i
President and CEO

When the search began for a new top cop, Susan Ballard had already turned in her retirement papers after 32 years on the force. Now the former Major is marking her 33rd year at HPD – as Chief.

All of Honolulu's former Police Chiefs had something in common besides being male. They upheld a tradition of reticence in their public statements. Speaking broadly and briefly, they'd usually decline to elaborate, with the explanation that an investigation was ongoing; or that matters were undergoing review. And mostly, what they divulged about their personal lives was basic statistics.

Here comes the new Honolulu Police Chief, Susan Ballard. She thinks more transparency is necessary, as the Honolulu Police Department seeks to restore public trust. "Maybe I'm a little T.M.I. (too much information)," she laughs.

She has freely shared that she and others were "sidelined" for years during the administration of then-Chief Louis Kealoha for objecting to how the department was being run. Kealoha, with his deputy city prosecutor wife Katherine, is in the crosshairs of a sprawling federal corruption case.

In my two-part Long Story Short interview with her this month, Ballard opens up about her formative experiences – growing up "overweight and buck-toothed" in Virginia and North Carolina; being raised with the Southern hospitality principle and Emily Post manners; experiencing domestic violence by a boyfriend with whom she came to Hawai'i decades ago; her accidental path to HPD; how she reacted during her long tenure to male police officers who didn't appreciate women on the force; her unusual, short sleep schedule; why she loves Hawai'i; her decision not to marry; her four "furry babies" – three dogs and a blind cat; and what the Police Department needs now.

What you'll find is that she is an original. She has taken to heart good advice and she's made good friends, but she didn't follow anyone else's footsteps in living her life or managing her career.

Get to know Honolulu's new Police Chief, by joining us for two Long Story Short episodes on Tuesday, August 21, and Tuesday, August 28, at 7:30 pm on PBS Hawai'i. The programs also will be viewable online, at www.pbshawaii.org/lss/

COVER STORY

Pomaikaʻi Lyman

Monday, August 27, 7:30 pm

Pomaikaʻi Lyman is ready to step into the spotlight and embrace carrying on a powerful musical legacy.

For PBS Hawaiʻi's newest recording of Nā Mele in the Harry and Jeanette Weinberg Multimedia Studio, Lyman presents herself as a performer shaped by a musical "decade of discovery" that has now brought her center stage.

"I think all of my life experiences to this point have been helping me to find my voice," she says. "I'm slowly understanding that each one of these experiences are what help to build that voice, and that when I go out and perform in front of people, I have more of a story to share."

Lyman's musical talent was cultivated under the guidance of one of the most beloved and legendary voices in Hawaiian music, her grandmother, "Aunty" Genoa Keawe. Known for her leo kiʻekiʻe (Hawaiian falsetto) and yodel-like haʻi style, paired with her trademark ability to hold high notes for more than two minutes, Aunty Genoa enchanted visitors and locals alike during her long and illustrious career.

Growing up, Lyman received one-on-one instruction from her tūtū, where she was instilled with the importance of learning the history and story of a song. After Aunty Genoa's death in 2008, Lyman realized that despite any lingering reservations, this musical legacy would become her kuleana.

"It was at that point that I understood that I was going to be expected to carry on something that would help to uplift not only my own family and myself, but others around me," she recalls.

While stepping into the spotlight once occupied by her tūtū has been intimidating, Lyman isn't embarking on the path alone. Like most things in her life, it is a family affair. "Any time I'm on the stage, I'm with family," she says. "Family is all I know. So, when you ask me to present myself … my cousins, my uncles, my aunties … that's me, that's who I am."

The Nā Mele set is a reimagining of the parlor in the Keawe's Papakōlea home that saw a constant flow of family, friends and musicians. "Tūtū's parlor was a place

… of aloha,” Lyman recalls. “It was a gathering place. When musicians came to our house, the first thing they saw when they walked in to the door was this living room.”

It was second nature for Aunty Genoa to surround herself onstage with her family, equip them with instruments and encourage them to share their talents. Similarly, Lyman shares the Nā Mele stage with loved ones. Accompanied by musicians Po‘okela Wood on guitar, Keao Costa on bass, and Jeff Au Hoy on steel guitar, her family and friends lounge about and enjoy the performance. Some join in the music in a relaxed, kanikapila style. Keiki sprawl on the floor, instruments in hand. The shelves that border the stage hold precious family heirlooms brought from home.

The late Aunty Genoa Keawe’s rocking chair was brought to the PBS Hawai‘i studio for the recording.

Lyman is joined by her cousin Kama Hopkins for “Beautiful Kahana,” and the whole room joins in for a performance of the popular hula song “Noho Paipai,” also known as the “Rocking Chair Hula,” led by Aunty Carol Momi Bee Kahawaiola‘a. Behind the performers sits Aunty Genoa’s personal rocking chair, engraved with her initials — a reminder of her presence throughout the performances.

“It’s through the music that I’m able to connect and feel close to my kūpuna,” says Lyman, “to be able to know that the music that I’m singing was once sung by them, to know that the messages that we are giving are the same messages that [Aunty Genoa] was giving when she performed … And that’s exciting for me, just to know that I’m able to connect in that way, where it’s as if we’re sitting in our parlor, and she’s telling the story.”

Puanani Burgess

Tuesday, August 14, 7:30 pm

Puanani Burgess, Zen Buddhist priest, poet, community builder and former activist, went by "Chris" until she was 26 years old. Born Christabelle Puanani Sonoda, her Japanese father and Hawaiian mother gave her an "American name," as was common at the time. They threw in Puanani "just in case" she ever wanted to connect with her heritage, Burgess says.

That time came when Burgess heard the call of community activism. Concerned by the trajectory of the Ko ʻOlina resort development, she was instrumental in the community resistance to the project. Burgess used her skills as a law student to become what she calls a "dragon feeder" – someone able to navigate the complex rules of a large system like government or the DOE the way one might negotiate with a stubborn dragon.

She discovered, however, that the people she was negotiating with – people who were on the other side of the issue – were not monsters. Burgess became a strong mediator by creating a safe space for people to come together and speak earnestly. She asks them to "dig the loʻi deep" with her as she says in her poem He Alo A He Alo (Face to Face) so that they can understand each other. Today, she says she still doesn't know what job she was meant to do in life, but her work is as the community's aunty. "Aunty is such an important job," she says.

PARTNER PROFILE

Hawaii State Federal Credit Union

Andrew Rosen
President and CEO

Hawaii State Federal Credit Union, with more than 100,000 members statewide, is the proud sponsor of the new animated PBS KIDS television series Pinkalicious & Peterrific. The credit union's President and CEO, Andrew Rosen, says:

"We seek out community partnerships with nonprofits, such as PBS Hawaiʻi, who share our mission to support education in Hawaiʻi. 'Always Right By You' is our member promise, but it's also a promise we make to our community."

Education has long been a focus for Hawaii State FCU. The credit union supports Hawaii's teachers and students through its Lowell Kalapa scholarship program, invests in education grants for public school teachers and gives back to local nonprofits such as PBS Hawaiʻi.

Hawaii State FCU has also made financial education a cornerstone of the organization, encouraging Islanders from keiki to kupuna to learn more about personal finance by providing free seminars to the community.

Pinkalicious & Peterrific, which airs Monday-Friday and Sunday at 7:30 am on PBS Hawaiʻi, encourages children to explore the arts and explore their creativity.

PBS Hawaiʻi is thankful to Hawaii State FCU for supporting learning and discovery for children across the state through this fun, curriculum-based children's series.

Mahalo a nui loa to the Hawaii State Federal Credit Union for its support of PBS Hawaiʻi. If you or someone you know would like to be a program sponsor, please contact PBS Hawaiʻi's Director of Business Support, Patty Doo, at pdoo@pbshawaii.org or call 808.462.5048.

NEXT MONTH

KĀKOU – Hawaiʻi's Town Hall

LIVE Thursday, September 13, 8:00 pm

They're coming. In fact they're already here. Robots, Artifical Intelligence and other technology will redefine our employment landscape and local economy. Do you fear what's ahead? Or do you see an opportunity to make Hawaiʻi stronger for future generations?
