Concealed Carry: Should the Government Restrict Where Guns Are Allowed?

Concealed Carry: Should the Government Restrict Where Guns Are Allowed?

Thursday, March 30 at 7:30 pm

All four Hawai'i counties are issuing concealed carry permits to gun owners following a U.S. Supreme court ruling last summer that expanded gun rights.

The ruling, in a New York case, said provisions in Hawai'i's statute regarding licenses to carry were unconstitutional, specifically the so-called "proper cause" element, in which an applicant needed to show "reason to fear injury to the applicant's person or property" before being granted a license by the chief of police.

The discussion now centers on efforts at both county and state levels to create laws designating "sensitive locations" where firearms would not be allowed.

One bill before the Legislature, SB 1230, lists sensitive locations including schools from preschools to colleges, public parks, government buildings, places that serve alcohol, courts, voting centers, permitted public gatherings and nearby sidewalks, public transportation vehicles and stations, hospitals, financial institutions and other private property unless otherwise indicated.

Another bill, SB 621, says Hawai'i should become a "constitutional carry" state like many others that "allows the public carrying of firearms without any special licensing or permitting requirements."

Other bills address expiration dates of licenses, increased minimum gun safety instruction time, written tests, and whether an applicant lacks "essential character or temperament" to carry a firearm.

In the next KĀKOU: Hawai'i's Town Hall, PBS Hawai'i is bringing together community leaders and citizens with varied perspectives to discuss next steps. The live 90-minute program, Concealed Carry: Should the Government Restrict Where Guns Are Allowed? premieres at 7:30 pm on Thursday, March 30. Viewer participation is encouraged.

Top to Bottom: The eisa drumming group Chinagu
Momoka Gillis says working at Toe Beans & Drean

Home is Here

Wednesday, March 29 at 7:30 pm

Cultural dance to the beat of drums, delicate floral arrangements that soothe and inspire, and giving hope to cats and the disabled describe stories in this month's episode of Home is Here.

While many people in Hawai'i are familiar with taiko drumming, what may be lesser-known is eisa drumming. This centuries-old Okinawan art combines booming drums and, at times, acrobatic footwork. We'll show you how Chinagu Eisa Hawaii is putting a contemporary spin on eisa's traditional roots.

From roots to flowers, Ikebana International's Honolulu chapter is celebrating more than 60 years. Its motto is "Friendship Through Flowers" and that held true despite the pandemic. The organization adapted, moving its classes and some of its events online to keep members connected. In this episode, we showcase the different schools of ikebana and explain why this is more than simply arranging flowers.

Finally, we take you to a nonprofit looking to fulfill two missions at once. KAT Charities has a special focus on helping cats, but it also aims to help people with disabilities. To do that, it recently opened a café called Toe Beans & Dreams in 'Aiea. The café is partially staffed by people with disabilities. It also features two rooms where visitors can interact with cats that are up for adoption.

"We only take animals off the street," says KAT Charities CEO Karen Tyson. "Our population of animals is the animals that have absolutely no one in the world. They're alone. They're isolated. They need help and they need somebody to give them a chance. Very, very much like our kids that we hire with disabilities, they need someone to give them a chance."

u Eisa Hawaii gets ready to perform at the Okinawan Festival. An example of an arrangement from the Sogetsu school of ikebana.
ns Café has helped her gain confidence.

Home is Here

Wednesday April 26 at 7:30 pm

Hawaiian green sea turtles, or honu, are the most common species of turtles found in the islands. Although honu are protected by state and federal laws, a number of threats continue to harm the population, including man-made threats. In next month's episode of Home is Here, we'll introduce you to a team on Maui that responds to more than 200 calls a year for sick, injured and distressed sea turtles. And turtles are not only rescued, they are nursed back to health.
