KĀKOU – Hawai‘i’s Town Hall Rescheduled for October 25

LIVE broadcast and live stream: Thursday, October 25 from 8:00-10:00 pm

Encore: Sunday, October 28 from 1:00-3:00 pm

As a statewide broadcaster, we care about what’s top of mind among our fellow islanders. During the second week of September, it was Olivia – the storm, aftermath and the public’s safety.

That’s why we decided to postpone the September 13 live KĀKOU broadcast on preparing our children for the automated workplace of the future. That town hall is now scheduled for a live broadcast and live stream October 25 from 8:00-10:00 pm.

One of the subjects of group conversation during this town hall will come from local educators, many of whom are quite passionate about giving elementary school students the tools they need to co-exist with machines in the workplace of the future. We want to thank Kailua Elementary School on Windward O’ahu for allowing us to observe classroom instruction.

CEO MESSAGE

“Comfort Women” – A Twisted Euphemism

I remember exactly what I said some three decades ago to a Honolulu news colleague, when we first heard the expression “comfort women” and learned what it meant.

“How twisted is that?” I said. “A truly deceptive term to hide horrendous brutality against the powerless.”

Of course, that’s what euphemisms do. They mask unpleasantness; they blunt the horror.

This euphemism refers to young women of little means, mostly teenagers, forced into sexual slavery by the Imperial Japanese Army during the Sino-Japanese War and World War II. In filthy conditions, they were required to sexually service 20, 30, sometimes 50 Japanese soldiers a day. They endured beatings, infection, disease and abortions. Most died.

At the end of World War II, survivors felt so much shame that many didn’t go home. They sought new lives and didn’t speak of their ordeal. One former captive was Keum-Ju Hwang, of South Korea, who finally resolved to tell her story before she died. She spoke in 1993 at a University of Hawai’i symposium – and Honolulu resident Nora Okja Keller was in that audience.

Keller, born in Seoul and of half Korean ancestry, felt a “burden of history” and embarked on a journey of research and writing. The result was a critically acclaimed first novel, Comfort Woman. She recalled that before she heard Ms. Hwang’s account, she was only aware of scenes in Korean soap operas: “There’d be this mysterious woman, veiled in black, going through the background. And the reference would be, ‘Oh...do you see that woman? Something bad happened to her during the war.’”

PBS Hawai’i will air an encore of my 2008 Long Story Short conversation with Nora Okja Keller on Tuesday, October 16, the week before our October 22 premiere of a POV film, The Apology, which follows three survivors – from China, the Philippines and South Korea. (See interview with the filmmaker on pages 4-5.)

Keller’s inspiration, Ms. Hwang, died in 2013, knowing she had done her part to let the world understand her soul-scarring but freeing truth.

Interview with filmmaker Tiffany Hsiung
by Emily Bodfish, PBS Hawai'i

During World War II, the Imperial Japanese Army kidnapped approximately 200,000 young women and forced them into military sexual slavery as "comfort women." The Apology follows three of these women – Adela Reyes Barroquillo in the Philippines, Cao Hei Mao in China and Gil Won-Ok in South Korea – in the ongoing movement pressing the Japanese government for a formal apology that has never come. Seventy years after their imprisonment, and after decades of living in silence and shame, these once invisible women (culturally referred to as "grandmothers") give their first-hand accounts of the truth for the record in hopes that this horrific chapter of history will not be forgotten.

pbshawaii.org

Filmmaker Tiffany Hsiung spoke with us by phone from Toronto, Canada about the film:

PBS Hawai'i: Could you take us through the process of deciding to make this film and how it became, as you say, a film you "needed" to make?

I was appalled and shocked when I first heard about comfort women, mainly because I was already turning 25 and had never heard about them before. Bits and pieces of stories about WWII in Asia would be told by elders and family members, but they never talked about the sexual slavery that occurred.

I was invited by educators in North America to document teachers in Asia who were survivors. It was through that two week tour that I realized there was so much more to learn. I wanted to learn, not just about what happened to the grandmothers when they were comfort women, but about the aftermath. So many war stories focus on the act itself, when I think the six decades of surviving better illustrates the gravity and the impact of what they lived through. I knew we wanted to let the grandmothers take us on their journey. I knew I didn't want it to be saturated with archival footage or scholars and historians talking about "the facts."

I realized working on the project that my own silence and shame from my experience as a survivor of sexual violence was something I was still holding onto, and the grandmothers gave me the strength to come to terms with that. It was an organic process, and the film ended up being something I needed to make.

“I couldn’t get married, but not by choice, because I am not intact, not whole.”

GRANDMA CAO
China

Cao Hei Mao and her daughter

“I don’t want to be reborn as something else... I want to be reborn as a woman. I want to be someone’s precious daughter, married into a precious family and have my own family. How wonderful that would be.”

GRANDMA GIL
South Korea

Gil Won-Ok reading her speech in China, supported by activist Meehyang Yoon.

What kept you going, and what perspective can you give viewers to help them digest this emotional film?

It was difficult. I remember trying not to cry in front of the grandmothers, and when we filmed in locations they had been taken to, I had nightmares. There was only one time I felt like I couldn’t go on, and that was the passing of Grandma Adela. I was closest to her, and we had dreams of traveling with the film together. My greatest regret is that I wasn’t able to finish the film in time for her to see it, and the amount of love and support she got from audiences around the world. I know that would have made her so happy and proud.

What was important to me to bring across in the film was the human spirit of the grandmothers, the levity they brought to everything they were doing. There is so much life in them, and that is what got me through the hardest moments.

And where do you think their strength of spirit and levity comes from?

The human condition is both laughter and tears; we’re not just one emotion. After surviving what they had endured, the grandmothers just have so much love to give. They want to give to a new generation.

What are the newest developments for the Grandmothers’ and their movement?

Even though she says in the film that she wants to just eat and sleep from now on, Grandma Gil is still traveling to spread awareness for the cause. The grandmothers have also started the “Nabi” Fund (Korean word for “butterfly”), which they contribute to themselves to help women currently enduring sexual slavery or violence around the world.

The new Korean government is standing behind the grandmothers, aiming to create a new agreement with the Japanese government that listens to the grandmothers’ demands – mostly having to do with education. The “One-Million Signature” petition highlighted in the film is also still available to sign.

What would you like viewers to come away with after seeing the film?

I hope viewers will be inspired by the grandmothers, their resilience. I hope viewers can look into their own lives and see how they might be contributing to the cycle of silence and shame. It starts with our own families; you never know what a family member has been through. I hope they can open up a safe space for conversation about sexual violence.

This interview has been edited for clarity and length.

He traces fascism's history from its roots in the turbulent aftermath of World War I, when masses of angry people rose up, to the rise of charismatic leaders who manipulated that anger, and the totalitarian societies they built. Along the way, Rick visits poignant sites throughout Europe relating to fascism, and talks with Europeans whose families lived through those times.
