YOUTH MENTAL HEALTH

CEO MESSAGE

Many of us are guilty of carelessly being insensitive to a friend in need. I can think of a few heartless comments that I recently blurted out, only to feel like a moron the moment the words left my mouth.

Most of us feel remorse when we realize someone asking for help was on the receiving end of our crass and inconsiderate comments. Then there are those who simply lack empathy or understanding, which can lead to fear, stigma and discrimination. Prejudice against people with mental illness can be subtle or painfully obvious, and it is always harmful.

May is Mental Health Awareness Month and PBS Hawai'i is committed to being a vehicle for positive discussion about the issue and the source of meaningful and engaging storytelling. Many of our local programs throughout the month will focus on this issue.

Mental health is, arguably, equally as important as all other aspects of health. Some experts argue that it is the most important part of overall health. Yet, it is the most mischaracterized and neglected. This is especially true for young people.

Hawai'i's youth, like their peers across the country, are experiencing a mental health crisis. Bullying, depression, isolation and poverty are not new problems but they can be heightened, particularly through social media.

Youth mental health has always been a topic explored by HIKI NŌ on PBS Hawai'i students in their stories. The onset of the COVID-19 pandemic in March of 2020 launched a new genre of HIKI NŌ storytelling – the Student Reflection – that focuses on the interior world of the student correspondent.

On May 4, Mental Health America of Hawai'i (MHAH) will present three HIKI NŌ on PBS Hawai'i students and two HIKI NŌ schools with Student Voice Awards at its annual event. MHAH recognized that first-person reporting on mental health is a powerful tool for removing the stigma of mental health challenges and taking this once taboo subject out of the darkness and into the public forum for constructive discussion and proactive dialogue. See the awarded stories May 30 on HIKI NŌ on PBS Hawai'i.

Also, on May 4 at 7:30 pm, Insights on PBS Hawai'i will feature a live discussion about the mental health of Hawai'i's youth including the limited resources available to combat reports of rising rates of suicide and self-harm.

Life-changing decisions that weigh heavily on a young person's future path also create stress, which affects mental health. This includes deciding what to do after high school. Is it better to go to college or go straight into the workforce? On May 25 at 7:30 pm, PBS Hawai'i will present KĀKOU: Hawai'i's Town Hall, Should I Stay or Should I Go?

Sadly, more than half of people with mental illness do not receive help for their disorders. Often, people avoid or are reluctant to seek treatment because of public stigma, bullying and shame, some worry about social isolation, retaliation and thoughts of losing their jobs and livelihood.

Are we paying attention? As with any health issue, prevention is key, followed by quick action when a problem surfaces. A first step in addressing these issues is to talk about them, openly and with an eye on finding solutions. Research shows knowing or having contact with someone with mental illness is one of the best ways to reduce stigma. Individuals speaking out and sharing their stories can have a positive impact.

PBS Hawai'i is speaking out against stigma. We hope you will too.

With gratitude and appreciation,

and the entire PBS Hawai'i family

Home is Here

Wednesday, May 31 at 7:30 pm

Designer Keola Rapozo and graphic novelist R. Kikuo Johnson are two artists deeply rooted in the place where they were born.

Keola grew up on the windward side of O'ahu and was shaped by his experiences there. In 2006, alongside business partner and former pro skater Rene Matthyssen, he launched Fitted, a clothing label specializing in hats and apparel. Keola uses the modern art form of streetwear to share Hawaiian culture and values. "I feel like design...is adjacent to storytelling...we just use this medium: different palettes, different fabrics, different styles, different techniques to share our stories." Those stories have kept the brand growing strong for nearly two decades.

R. Kikuo Johnson was born and raised on Maui and attended Seabury Hall. At a very early age, he fell in love with comic books and started drawing his own at 8 years old. While still in college at the Rhode Island Institute of Design he started to create his first graphic novella, Night Fisher. "I really wanted to show the Hawai'i that I knew because in any of the media I saw I didn't recognize the Hawai'i that was presented at all."

Today, he lives in Brooklyn and works as a freelance illustrator. While he is garnering success and acclaim on the mainland, his heart remains in his island home. "I've lived in Brooklyn for years and I still feel like a visitor. I don't think that'll ever go away. I always think of Maui as home."

The Queen's Influence The Vanishing Culture of Hiko in Tonga

Thursday, May 18
at 8:30 pm

Why do all the women in Tonga know how to juggle? That simple question set off a search for answers captured in the documentary, The Queen's Influence – The Vanishing Culture of Hiko in Tonga. Filmmaker Paprika Leaverton explores the origins of the native juggling art known as "hiko" and how it was revived by one of Tonga's most revered monarchs. The film also takes a closer look at the country's gender and power dynamics and how hiko is helping to empower women in a male-dominated society.

HIKI NŌ

PBS HAWAII

MAHALO TO OUR SPONSORS

Over the 12 years HIKI NŌ on PBS Hawai'i has evolved, we at PBS Hawai'i are filled with gratitude for the supporters that helped start and nurture our statewide student digital storytelling and workforce development program: Bank of Hawai'i Foundation – lead sponsor for all 12 years; the Stupski Foundation of San Francisco – major multi-year supporter and strategic education partner; The Kosasa Foundation – multi-year sponsor, supporting student workforce development; The Freeman Foundation – funding production of the shows you see on-air and online; and the Hazel H. Takumi Foundation has consistently included HIKI NŌ in its annual giving plan for general support.

Other supporters have enabled PBS Hawai'i to focus on developing specific aspects of HIKI NŌ program outreach including the Cooke Foundation, Ltd. – teacher professional development; State Farm – sponsors of our statewide student storytelling competitions; and Alaska Airlines Foundation – helping to connect students with industry professional mentors.

We have worked with many special people along the way, such as Ms. Dot Mason of the George Mason Fund at the Hawai'i Community Foundation who before HIKI NŌ was conceived, believed in the importance of developing the next generation of journalists. And, people like you, who support student voice and storytelling on PBS Hawai'i. Mahalo nui.

Because of foundation, corporate and community support, HIKI NŌ has the privilege of working with and cultivating storytelling excellence with teachers and students across the islands. Our heartfelt gratitude extends to them – Hawai'i storytellers – who over the past 12 years, shared with us their personal narratives about the people, places and issues that impact them and their communities.

Together, we empower students with critical thinking, communication skills, creativity, and confidence through HIKI NŌ. Our students have honed those skills to rise as national leaders in digital storytelling. In March, Hawai'i schools brought home 47 awards from the national Student Television Network Competition, proving once more that Hawai'i is among the top states in the nation when it comes to student digital media.

But the most exciting aspect of HIKI NŌ on PBS Hawai'i is what lies ahead in the next 12 years and the yet-to-be created stories that will continue to prove that Hawai'i's keiki HIKI NŌ...Can Do!
