family ingredients

SEASON 4

SATURDAYS IN NOVEMBER
AT 7:30 PM

family ingredients

Saturdays, Beginning November 7, 7:30 pm

Family Ingredients returns for its fourth season with four inspiring shows that span the Pacific and Europe, where cherished family recipes become the starting point for extraordinary discoveries about identity, ancestry and belonging. Hosted by Hawai‘i chef Ed Kenney, the Emmy Award-winning series continues to honor genealogy, preserve cultural traditions and celebrate the universal power of food to connect us to our past and to one another.

American Samoa: An Ancestral Home

NOVEMBER 7

Chef Ed Kenney joins Olympic diving gold medalist Greg Louganis on his first journey to American Samoa. Adopted as an infant and raised by a Greek American family, Greg Louganis learned as a young adult that he was half Samoan. What begins as a search for his roots becomes a journey of love, family and belonging. As he connects with his ancestral culture, he discovers that home is not simply a place – it is the people who embrace you and remind you that you have always belonged.

England: Scones

NOVEMBER 14

Native Hawaiian vocalist Amy Hānaiali‘i traces her lineage from Hawai‘i to England, uncovering the remarkable ties between the Hawaiian Kingdom and British Monarchy. Along the way, she discovers that genealogy is more than a family tree – it is a bridge connecting generations, cultures and the stories that shape who we are.

England: Cultural Exchange

NOVEMBER 21

Zoe Mia is a Hawaiian woman studying in England. The Kamehameha Schools graduate embarks on a personal exploration of place, identity and heritage. Through food, history and cultural exchange, she discovers new connections to Hawai‘i and a deeper understanding of home, while honoring Hawai‘i’s historic student exchange program with England.

Norway: Lefse

NOVEMBER 28

Using a treasured family food memory as her guide, Maui-born Amy Hānaiali‘i traces her ancestry to Norway. Beginning with a family recipe for lefse (potato pancake), Hānaiali‘i follows the footsteps of her Norwegian ancestors to the mountain community of Tinn, Telemark and on the way uncovers the little-known story of Norwegian migration to Hawai‘i's sugar plantations in the 1880s.

PBS HAWAIʻI PRESENTS

Stairway to Heaven: Haʻikū Stairs in Paradise
Thursday, November 12, 8:30 pm

The battle over what to do with the Haʻikū Stairs in Windward Oʻahu has gone on for decades and to this day is hung up in court. How we got here is the subject of a new documentary by Corey Todd Jones, a communications specialist with the U.S. Navy formerly stationed in Hawaiʻi.

The city wants to remove the stairs citing liability, maintenance and access issues. Others want to preserve the stairs citing historical significance, environmental concerns of demolition and the potential for tourism.

In short, it's complicated.

The stairs started as the Haʻikū ladder, on which workers hauled cables up steep cliffs as the Navy built a radio communications station during World War II. Jones says Hawaiʻi was a significant part of his life from a tourist's perspective, as his family visited many times when he was little. That changed during a tour of duty here.

"Of all the stories on Oʻahu I could have explored, I found myself captivated by the Haʻikū Stairs. The combination of its deep Navy history, the complex local controversy and my desire to make a positive contribution for future generations compelled me," he says.

The documentary traces how an engineering marvel transformed into a source of conflict for the island. Jones called making the film a massive undertaking. "I dug through Environmental Impact Statements, newspaper and radio archives, social media, etc. I also worked closely with military historians, the University of Hawaiʻi, Bishop Museum, Honolulu City Hall and National Archives."

Getting all the interviews he wanted proved to be challenging, forcing him to adapt. In the end, he says, "the film captures my genuine curiosity about the issue..."

Now, four decades later, she still rises to challenges, rescuing abandoned horses, battling natural disasters and aiding her community.

What You 'ONO For?

Food has a superpower. It can feed our souls as much as it nourishes our bodies, taking us back to moments in time that shaped our love for a favorite dish. We take you on a delicious journey sprinkled with tastes of PBS Hawai'i's culinary classics to contemporary chefs and beloved dishes of today. Chefs Sam Choy, Lynette Lo Tom and Adam Tabura serve up some of their favorite recipes and the stories behind them that make them so much more than just a plate of food.
